We are Iowa Mennonite School, 1975. We have come together from different districts, states, and even countries. We are here because we sought to become a part of IMS and what the school stands for.

We were given a taste of IMS from social functions at IMS: through Chili suppers, basketball games, and church-sponsored functions. We came to school here in search of something different, not found in public schools. We expected a change, and whether good or bad, everyone found it.

After 30 years of student and teachers, IMS still strives to meet our educational and social needs.

Coming to a different community and lifestyle, Sheila Gomez and Susan Gutierrez discover new problems as problems at IMS.

IMS faces us

How did we come to find IMS? It could have been an influence of our brothers and sisters who have already graduated from here. It could be that our friends came here. It might have been just a coincidence or just a last minute

IMS challenges us

What's so special about IMS that we come from as far as seven hundred miles to attend? Why would some leave the security of families and homes to face life in a new community? Why with limited courses and sky-high tuition do we decide on IMS?

It could be the size of the school. A student body of 155 allows every student the chance to participate, whether it be in intramural sports during activity period, the school play, choir publications, or in school life at large. Maybe the Christian atmosphere provided by concerned faculty, Bible classes, and fellow Christians is a drawing factor.

We have special events here, too, and maybe they are part of the attraction. We are given the chance to share spiritually in chapel services five days a week. Programs range from musical groups to power-preaching ministers to spontaneous testimonies and songs. Everyone enjoys the break from regular classes in the fall provided by school-day-out. It usually is announced only the day before, and the destination is known only by the faculty. The Mennonite High School Music Festival held annually in the spring gives the choir a chance to share in song with other high school choruses. Track and Field day held in the spring affords fun and exercise to participants and spectators alike.

Are these what attracted us to IMS? What have they contributed to our growth here?

The first part of the document discusses the importance of maintaining accurate records of all transactions. It emphasizes that every entry must be clearly documented, including dates, amounts, and descriptions. This ensures transparency and allows for easy verification of the financial data.

In the second section, the author outlines the various methods used to collect and analyze data. These include direct observation, interviews with key personnel, and the use of specialized software tools. Each method has its own strengths and limitations, which are carefully evaluated to ensure the most reliable results are achieved.

The third part of the report focuses on the interpretation of the findings. It explains how the collected data was analyzed using statistical techniques and how these results were compared against industry benchmarks. The goal was to identify trends, patterns, and areas where improvements could be made.

Finally, the conclusion summarizes the overall findings of the study. It highlights the key insights gained from the research and provides recommendations for future actions. The author stresses that ongoing monitoring and evaluation are essential to ensure continued success and growth.

Dear Editors,

I look at my junior year with mixed feelings. At the first of the year, I was pretty skeptical about the new teachers. But when I got to know them, I realized they weren't so terrible after all.

A sense of superiority kind of goes along with being an upperclassman. But I found that being a junior also means getting used to taking on more responsibility, whether I wanted to or not.

I found that when my junior year came, a lot of other kids and I started thinking more seriously about what we would like to do in the future.

I like my junior year, yet I hate it. I don't like the "inbetween" feeling, knowing I can't be a carefree sophomore, nor can I feel like a senior waiting expectantly to graduate. But I like it because it gives me more time to get to know people, and more time to get to know myself.

Sophomore year brings on new assignments

Dear Editors

Becoming sophomores has meant accepting more responsibilities. Responsibilities such as jobs, licenses, and more homework, or just more responsibility because we're older.

But where do we belong? We're not seniors counting the days till freedom or juniors dreaming of being seniors, or freshmen trying to "make the scene."

Where do we belong? We're in-between sophomores, and making the most of it!

Dear Editors:

The freshman class of 1975 thinks this is a pretty good school. Here at IMS you can really do and say what you feel. You're looked at as more of an individual than just "one of the class."

At first I thought that we would get pushed around by the upperclassmen, but it really isn't that bad at all, though some refer to us as "shrimpy Freshmen." Activity periods get you away from the class routine and at the same time are a lot of fun.

Faculty form attitudes from teaching experiences

Dear Editors:

During my seven years at Mount Vernon, I have increasingly worn the uniform of a teacher to help organize experiences that will contribute to the formation of attitudes and the development of a lifestyle.

This year our campus community has concentrated with teachers who have been asked to share with our students ways we have had to learn how to work and how to live, and yet be proud of these experiences we have become what we are.

Our year has excited me completely during a period of hard, promising only by being accepted into college by excelling as an athlete, only meeting that goal as a person. Our achievements and efforts become meaningful when they have been used to lead lives acceptable to our Creator.

Your efforts as editors will have much more than sentiment. I value as your readers will in the future learn to be able to recall some of those memorable occasions which were so very important in developing lives.

Staff keeps it all together

Sweeping, scrubbing, cooking, and typing were only part of the skills required by the staff again this year.

Throughout the year, janitor Bill Swartzendruber could be found doing anything from cleaning desks and gym floors to fixing bleachers and sewing machines. Despite the long days, sometimes ten hours or more, Bill found his job enjoyable, especially the challenge of repairing things and the coffee breaks.

Busy in the kitchen each morning from 8 A.M. to 2:30 P.M. were head cook, Wilma Gingerich and helpers, Loretta Yoder and Berdine Beckler. Preparing a well-balanced meal that everyone could enjoy sometimes seemed like a losing battle. Wilma commented, "We love to see a hungry crowd, especially when the meal is one that meets approval."

Punching lunch tickets, typing tests, and writing passes and admits were a few of Mary Stutzman's jobs as secretary while Mary Brenneman did the bookkeeping.

Most staff members agreed that it was a good feeling to be needed.

Part of Wilma Gingerich's job is untying knots in bags as well as solving the knots in preparing good meals for hungry students

STYLES

Every morning at 10:30, students and faculty met in center room for chapel. Whether seeking inspiration or relaxation, these twenty minutes provided opportunity for students to think of things other than geometry assignments, chemistry tests, or Bible term papers.

With Merv Birky as adviser of the student chapel committee, student chapel was presented once a week. Given the chance to become in-involved, students were asked to bring records that meant something special to them or to join in singspirations. A student evaluation of chapel was made at the end of first semester.

Films and slides were welcome changes as students were allowed to forget assigned chapel seating arrangements. Also anticipated were the chapels which ran over the allotted time, thus shortening third period classes.

State supplies transportation

One way or another, although not always on time, we got to school. IMS said good-bye this fall to the privately owned buses as public buses transported students. Sharing buses with Mid-Prairie students meant following the Mid-Prairie school district schedule, a shortened school day, and often being late for school. Concerning the new busing, one student remarked, "I don't like the new busing program. It's such a long ride, and we leave school so late."

Others appreciated not having to pay for their transportation to and from school. Those not living within the busing area were paid by the state to help reduce their driving costs.

Even with the busing, a majority of students drove to school. Some did so because they did not live within the busing district. Others chose to drive simply for convenience. Not all chose these methods as a means of transportation, however. Nicky Yutzy could be found even on the coldest days riding his bike, or walking to school

Lunch frees students from class routine

Every day the 11:50 bell announcing dinner time brought on a wild stampede of kids to the lunch room. Prior to this time kids kept their eyes glued to the clock, ready to jump at the sound of sweet release. Those who were hungry took five steps at once, threw their books on top of their lockers, and scrambled into line with friends. Others, more patient, lingered before joining the line.

Waiting for them at the head of the line was secretary Mary Stutzman who stood ready to punch lunch tickets. Students eagerly watched while servers wearing MacDonald's hats filled their trays with some of Wilma's specialties, whether homemade rolls, chocolate chip cookies or tacos.

The library was the scene for dieters and those who wished to listen to the stereo or finish some last-minute studying. When warm weather permitted, some persons could be found enjoying their noon hour in the sun.

Over noon provided a good time for students and teachers to discuss the makes and breaks of the day. Conversation and relaxation continued until the 12.25 bell brought everyone back into the afternoon routine.

Strike one", "deuce", or "jumpball" could be heard throughout the year as students participated in softball, basketball, volleyball, tennis badmitton, ping-pong, or soccer

The senior boys were successful in taking the championship in both soccer and flag football while the junior girls took over in the speedball championship. The Warriors became this year's winning softball team. They competed against the Sluggers, Tail Enders, Harold's Homers and Glen's Gliders which were only a minority of the teams. Participation in intramurals included munching on popcorn provided by the juniors concession stand, cheering a favorite team, or just plain watching

Activity period was not only used for the designated sports, but also for class meetings, pep assemblies, and prayer meetings. Students not taking part usually could be found in the library working industriously on homework

Varsity team members were put to work at officiating the sports. This opened up more opportunities for other students to take part. The female faculty members competed this year as players on the senior girls' teams while the male faculty members once again had their team in competition.

Due to the fifty minutes allowed for activity period, basketball quarters were reduced from eight minutes to six minutes. Second semester activity periods occurred twice a week instead of three times.

Whether at home or away from home, work claimed most students' leisure time. Jobs ranged from waitressing and pumping gas to cleaning bedrooms and milking cows. Pleasantview, Yoder Feeds, Foodland and John's 66 in Kalona offered after-school and weekend jobs for some ambitious students

When not working, Iowa City was once again the favorite spot for adventure-seeking students. Once there, a choice could be made between going bowling, taking in a movie, or stopping at

Happy Joes for a pizza. For those having trouble making the decision and lucky enough to have late curfews, the choice was made easy by doing all three

Then of course there were the quick trips to Kalona to "make the rounds," and the inevitable bushwhackers

With snowy weather came the added pasttime of snowmobiling. Racing up and down terraces till noses froze and fingers and toes were numb became quite a popular leisure activity

Working at Pleasantview Home fills Joann Roth's weekends, but helping people like Lena White makes it all worthwhile

After a short chapel, students ran for buses and cars to begin their school-day-out. Girls and guys dressed in grubby blue jeans and old T-shirts to get in the mood for an obviously different school day. The buses started up and everyone was off to begin the day in an unknown place.

An hour long ride brought them to Palisades Park. Buses stopped and unloaded the students to a day of freedom. All followed their noses, climbed up and down mountain cliffs, and finally ended up at the spot where lunch was to be served. There was time for volleyball, wading in the water, and just relaxing before a lunch of hot dogs and pork and beans.

The afternoon mood was different as students were on their own. Some chose to explore the cliffs with friends. An occasional snake added

Seniors work together for a successful year

With graduation as their goal, seniors worked hard to earn money for class gift and class trip. Throughout the year thirty-seven students participated in activities from sponsoring suppers, Talent Night, and a donkey basketball game to catching chickens and selling baked goods.

The class trip to Washington D.C. completed the year for the seniors. An evening in Cleveland watching the Cleveland Indians and Kansas City Royals compete in baseball added variety to the usual class trip.

In the beginning —

In the beginning was the creation and it was beautiful! A candle-lit Garden of Eden welcomed juniors and seniors to the May 11, 1974 banquet. Host and hostess, Mr. and Mrs. Ike Yoder greeted guests as they crossed a wooden bridge into the garden clearing. To keep a falling mural of apple trees from disrupting the mood of the evening, Richard Wenger used it in his talk to illustrate the fall of man. Directing the many hours spent making the banquet a success were chairwomen Ann Hochstetler, Brenda Nissley, and Juli Yoder.

The future for '74 seniors was prophesied by Jeanne Yoder and Doug Swartzendruber.

Personalities shine in "The Mouse that Roared"

A small 14th century country, Grand Fenwick, declared war on the United States and won in this year's all school play "The Mouse That Roared." Thirty-four cast members together with Merv Birky as director spent many after school hours at rehearsals to prepare for the two performances given April 4 and 5. The simple mindedness of the characters provided many light-hearted moments during rehearsals. Most cast members agreed that getting to know fellow participants made the play a rewarding experience.

Saturday, April 12th, nine chartered buses filled with 360 exuberant voices were welcomed by the IMS community for the 13th Annual Mennonite High School Choir Festival!

Rehearsals under the direction of guest conductor, Dr. Charles Hirt, began Saturday noon and continued until early evening. By 9:00 P.M. touring choirs were taken to their host churches.

Excitement mounted on Sunday as final preparations for the two festival programs began. Individual choirs presenting two songs each, began the programs followed by the mass choir.

"Sing unto God" accompanied by organist, Bill Ness, and strings opened the mass choir's program. "To sing in the choir with 400 other kids being directed by Dr. Hirt gave me a feeling that's hard to put into words. It was a real spiritual uplifting for me" exclaimed choir member Carol Basinger from EMHS.

Hosts Calvin Grabers and Harold Blossers and coordinator, Grace Tiessen, put a lot of hard work and careful planning into the festival so that things ran smoothly.

Coming from all over the U.S. and Canada, the buses get together at the MSP parking lot.

Jonathan Livingston Seagull set the mood for the 1975 Junior-Senior Banquet. Music and mural deas were taken from the movie while the theme, To Learn, To Discover, To Be Free, was taken from the book written by Richard Bach

On first arrival, guests were greeted by the sound of Lois Bender, Faith Yoder, and Mina Yoder as they sang and played guitar in the gym. Following this, host and hostess Leroy and Vilma Brenneman ushered the guests to center room where a beach hut and a boat on a sandy shore awaited. Murals depicting blue seas, birds, and sunny skies contributed to the airy feeling of a seashore atmosphere.

Sophomore waiters and waitresses dressed in blue and yellow served the meal which included fish, baked potatoes, green beans and cherry cheesecake. Guest speaker for the evening was June Alliman Yoder who gave a brief informal talk on her familiarity with the IMS faculty and the banquet theme. The banquet wasn't made a success, either. In September, head chairwoman Anna Marrer and her assistant Ruth Miller were elected by their class to organize the banquet. They, along with the other chairpersons and juniors, spent many hours of their time working to make a beautiful and enjoyable banquet.

Track and field day dawned with overcast skies and the likely prospect of rain. But despite the scattered rain and hazy weather, the day's activities got underway after chapel. By noon the skies turned blue and the sun shone through.

This year the student activity period committee, under Norm Yoder's supervision, decided to set a 75% minimum of student participation. Their goal of 120 students was finally met when a 3-legged race and a sack race were added to the list of afternoon activities. Everyone participated, whether in actual events or running errands, to make the day a successful one.

Even after the points were tallied, with sophomores leading the day's activities were not yet over. Alumni, faculty, prospective students and MYFs were given a chance to compete in their own events. Supper was held in center room followed by the presentation of annual awards including recognition for sports, music, publications and scholarship honors.

No doubt about it. No other school in the world has a room quite like our center room. What other room in the entire school assumes so many faces? The room that serves as chapel in the morning becomes transformed into a noisy room of hungry people at lunchtime. Later on in the day, it may be the meeting place for Y-CO or development committees. After school, it becomes a place for cheerleaders to perfect their cheers

Center room is used frequently for school and non-school functions. Suppers, assemblies, PTO, bake sales, prayer meetings, and wedding receptions all have been held here

Probably the most drastic change it sees is the morning of the Junior- Senior Banquet, when, after long hours of hard work the night before, it changes into a beautiful romantic setting for those invited. Anywhere from kitchens and workshops to livestock and cars, students were found exploring and expanding hidden skills.

Girls as well as boys could be found creating a variety of masterpieces in General Shop, Girls Shop, Mechanical Drawing, and Shop II, III, and IV classes. Double class periods gave more time for finishing individual projects and working on cars.

In Survival class, roles were switched once again as boys learned the basics of cooking and sewing. Miss Naffziger noted, "I find that boys are more eager to learn than girls. Girls think they already know what they're doing. Boys are more mischievous, however." Miss Naffziger taught Foods I and II, Clothing I and II, Home Arts, Consumer Economics, and Survival classes.

Going further than crops and milking cows, Agriculture I and II classes covered farm management, agribusiness, animal science, livestock production, and marketing.

Auto mechanics classes taught girls and boys how to tune and time a car, and how to disman-

Denny Yoder grinned, "I have a lot of adjustments to make yet. I'm still switching from one side of the fence to the other, from just being a student to teaching."

Stressing the importance of practical arts, Mr. Pickard expressed, "People are going into vocations more so than going to school, and are finding that a good job can be attained without a college education."

Practical arts broaden students' abilities

Students acquire business know-how

Timed writings and jobs kept freshmen and sophomores in Typing I busy. Using electric typewriters was one of the advantages of having smaller classes.

Taxes, different types of insurance, and supply and demand were a few of the topics discussed in General Business. Students especially enjoyed the week where they kept track of how much they spent during that week. Most were surprised at the high average.

What do we do in Accounting? Mess up each others calculations on the adding machine. This was one of the things Accounting I students accomplished. Preparing income statements, balance sheets, and trial balances all seemed worth the effort when frustrated students found that the debits and credits finally balanced.

Office Practice gave potential secretaries an indepth study of working in an office. Typing business letters, programs, and taking timed writings were a part of what was covered in class. Students were also taught how to operate office machines such as dictaphones and duplicators.

Asked how he felt about teaching business classes, Mr. Yoder replied, "I enjoy teaching business classes very much. I feel what is covered in class is something the students will be able to use the rest of their lives."

Newcomer guides science department for 7th year

In rooms 111 or 112 one could expect to find young scientists doing anything from recycling copper to performing surgery on frogs in Mr Newcomer's Earth Science, Biology, and Chemistry classes.

In Earth Science, working with maps, maps and more maps, shooting water rockets to unknown worlds, creating miniature volcanoes, and baking cakes were a few of the many projects that filled the freshmen's time.

RIGHT: Being able to write chemical equations is a must for chemistry students.

Biology and Chemistry were electives as only one science credit was required. Both were two period classes which provided more time for experiments and lab work. On longer classes, Mr. Newcomer commented, "I like it this way and wouldn't change it for anything."

Biology brought on many new experiences for classes made up of mostly sophomores. Students crawled through the woods counting bugs and plants grew strange things in test tubes, and found out what frogs look like inside and out.

In a Chemistry class consisting of nine juniors and seniors, students analyzed auto exhaust smoke, recycled copper and a variety of other impressive things. As one Chemistry student commented, "At this stage it seems pointless to everyday life, but as I get into college it sure will help."

Bible department adds more requirements

As in former years Bible courses were required for all students at IMS. This year however, the requirement of one semester course per year of attendance was raised to a full year course per year. Because more electives were added, several teachers shared the responsibility of teaching in this area.

Merv Birky guided freshmen in their study of the Gospels and early church development. Time was spent on Paul's letters and the book of Revelation. For variation the class wrote skits and paraphrased scripture along with the usual daily work and tests.

Sophomores studied Old Testament under the direction of L. Glen Guengerich. The course pointed out the importance of the Old Testament in relation to the light of the New Testament. Much of the time was spent in direct Bible reading from numerous versions which aided students' understanding.

Church History enabled juniors to more clearly understand the Anabaptist church and its principles and movements.

Students were able to express their own reactions through a major research paper dealing with some aspect of church history.

A team of Merv Birky and Delaine Naffziger led seniors into discussions of the Christian Faith and how it applies to everyday life. Using Decide for Yourself as a guide for making decisions, students wrote summaries on each chapter, including a statement on their own conclusion. Second semester was spent on Christian Family Living.

For a number of students "ma, ma, ma" and ha, ha, ha" to warm up the vocal chords in hopes of perfect harmony was a welcome switch from the usual humdrum of lectures and class-work. H.B.'s six years of teaching at IMS has acquainted everyone with his Italian Method of warm-up exercises. The annual Christmas program reaped results of these somewhat unusual exercises.

Signatures, rhythm, directing, and other basics of music were discovered by the freshmen in Music I. They used these newly acquired techniques to write their own music.

For several art students the discovery was in the different aspects of shape, line, and form. Others used these variations in creating their own painted masterpieces. IMS artists were later exposed to the works of others through a field-trip to Des Moines.

Physical Education is that required class which is supposed to make us feel and look better. For some it was a favorite class, while others saw it as a way to lose that extra fat around the middle.

Throughout the year students participated in various sports from badminton to basketball. When the weather permitted, classes took to the outdoors to play field hockey, speedball, soccer, tennis, and softball. As the days grew colder, second quarter was spent firming up those flabby muscles in Mr. May's Physical Fitness Program.

The rest of the year involved volleyball, badminton, table tennis and gymnastics.

Learning the basics and the swinging skills of golf was a new requirement for the seniors. Assignments for the first quarter included playing nine holes of golf at one of the local courses. Taking an afternoon off, the seniors enjoyed a trip to Iowa City to play golf at the Fairview Golf Course.

It was a class involving teamwork, cooperation, competition and fun!

With the addition of L. Glen Guengerich to the teaching staff, Mr. Howell's burden was somewhat lightened. Although the same text was used in both sophomore World History classes, each was different in the teaching techniques that were used.

Highlighting the American History classes was a field trip to visit local places of historical interest. Herbert Hoover's birthplace, the Museum of Anthropology and Plum Grove were among the places visited.

On November 5, the seniors in Mr. Howell's government classes brought the class to life by holding a mock election. The entire student body took part in the election by voting on the auto-

Problems, problems, and more problems are what faced Miss Zimmerman's Math I, Algebra, and Geometry students.

Math I students tried something new this year as they switched to an individualized work program. Miss Zimmerman commented "the students get a chance to work at their own speed. It seems to be working well and will be continued." Algebra students worked on equations and sweated through such things as $(a + b)(a - b) = a^2 - b^2$. Outside of the normal routine, Geometry students worked on projects dealing with measurements and made string sculptures.

An interesting and perhaps more subtle change in the math department was brought about when Miss Zimmerman became Mrs. Wendel Miller.

It seemed to be a conspiracy among English teachers that their students should learn to think. Most teachers admitted this was their goal to arouse the student's thoughts.

Through reading various short stories from their literature book, Leah Sonwan attempted to increase freshmen's reading comprehension as well as their writing capacities. Sophomores were urged by Linda Cutler to analyze the world about them through the use of literature. Juniors under the guidance of Jane Widmer read stories dealing with man's search for values.

An individualized Reading class sought to increase students' enjoyment of reading through improved reading skills. Seniors were able to choose fields of study from electives such as Mass Media, Drama, or World Literature.

Interterm accents school year

Developing new skills or just brushing up on old ones, students took a break during interterm.

Pottery, girls' basketball and agriculture were offered again this year for those just beginning or those who wished to acquire additional skills from previous years. Several new classes were added to the list of interterm electives such as auto mechanics, trapping, table tennis, and officiating. Leah Sonwani's class, Cradle of Civilization, added new insight as students learned of India's culture. Under the direction of Lynn Newcomer, beginning guitarists strummed along with a taped recording of their guitar lessons.

Classes requiring a touch of artistry were oil and acrylic painting, creative arts, and interior decorating. Furniture refinishing and rug weaving were offered to those desiring how to learn of home improvements. Creativity was also a part of photography as potential photographers learned how to take good pictures as well as to develop and print film.

Off-campus activities included serving at home, museums, and bowling. The Nelson County School in Iowa City and Pleasantview in Kalona were visited by volunteer workers in the serving at home group. After exploring several museums in Iowa City and West Branch, the three members of the museum class spent most of their mornings cataloging books at the Kalona Mennonite Historical Society. The bowling class was taken to the Memorial Union bowling lanes in Iowa City where they spent time improving their game.

Jobs and trips comprise off-campus interterm

Many new and exciting experiences were in store for the students who took part in interterm away from school

Norm Yoder and Delaine Naffziger helped find jobs for the students who worked out of school and were teacher's aides. Norm summarized, "It was very worthwhile for the students, and the employers and teachers were pleased with their work

The trip to Colorado was a cold, but rewarding experience for the nine students and two sponsors, Linda Cutler and Merv Birky. Roughing it at Rocky Mountain Mennonite Camp in -20 degree weather was not always pleasant but cross country skiing, inner tubing, and swimming at an indoor pool helped to make the trip more enjoyable

A German group of twelve students sponsored by Merle Schlabaugh, ventured to Winnipeg, Manitoba, where they lived in German homes and learned the different aspects of German life. "I'm really glad I went because I had to get along with people for two weeks," stated Melissa Yoder. "The things I enjoyed most were skating, tobogganing, and seeing the Harlem Globetrotters play."

Painting, working in a church library, and serving dinners to senior citizens were the jobs of the six students and sponsor Jane Widmer in Chicago. There was spare time for sight-seeing and sharing as a group. Ted Fisher remarked, "It was worth the money and better than staying in school, because it was a change. I was free to do what I wanted."

President Donovan Bender and vice president Clayton Troyer describe the next Y-Co project at their meeting

Can teachers relax while students take over their classes? Y-Co decided to give them the chance by sponsoring Teacher-Appreciation Day. Teachers and students both were given a break from daily routine as selected students taught the various classes.

Y-Co sponsored several "fun" days including a Mismatch Day when poor taste in clothing could be shown without embarrassment. Y-Co provided entertainment for the community through the movie The Cross and the Switchblade and the play Tomorrow Has Roots. The annual Christmas Banquet, roller skating parties, and Work Days were all credited to Y-Co.

Student council met every two weeks on Tuesday afternoons. Linda Cutler and Dave May were the Y-Co sponsors. They guided the officers and representatives with their ideas and helped carry them out. One of their goals was to try to set up a different type of student exchange program. Another was to make the Y-Co president a member of the school board. They hoped this would bring more of a tie between the board and the school.

One officer commented, "I really felt like we got something done. The main thing was to keep things organized. It was another way to get out of class!"

Choirs dominate the musical scene

Concert and Hillcrest choirs practiced daily to perfect music for their Christmas and spring programs. These choruses sang amid a sea of sample carpet squares fastened to the walls and ceiling in hopes of a milder sound. During Interterm, the Interior Decorating class redecorated the music room in yellow and green which lended a cheery, warmer atmosphere to the room and its singers

Various ensembles provided opportunity for interested persons to further share musically. Chamber Choir, an offspring of Concert Choir, gave added dimension to spring programs as well as the Christmas program. A junior sextet continued from last year presented numbers for chapel and supplemented the choirs at spring programs.

A gospel team sponsored by Y-CO went to Frontier Boys Village in Colorado to present them with a gift of $500. The group also shared songs, skits, and testimonies in churches of Omaha and Wood River, Nebraska, and Denver.

Staff pastes up Reflector

During the year the Reflector staff was kept busy putting out the monthly issues of the school paper. Under the careful supervision of editor Rita Miller, publication deadlines were always met despite various difficulties.

Reporters were given regular newsbeats to cover which dealt with just about all school activities and organizations besides areas of interest in the community. Photographers kept the layout artists and editors well supplied with specific photos or pictures of general interest. The editors had the job of organizing the articles and correcting mistakes before they were sent to the typists. At the beginning of second semester Lowell Ropp and Clayton Troyer were added to the staff.

With Merv Birky as sponsor, the journalism class assumed much of the work that had previously been left to the printer. All members of the class had the responsibility of helping to lay out and paste up the final copy. Rita explained, "Nobody can really know what goes into putting a newspaper together without doing paste-ups. Besides, it's the most fun."

Along with their work on the Reflector, the class went on several field trips including a journalism conference in Des Moines. All in all, the year of experience in writing articles and general newspaper management was interesting and helpful to all involved.

As editor, Rita Miller does a little bit of everything

Work on the '75 Reverie began in June, 1974, with a journalism workshop for yearbook staffs in Iowa City. During that week, plans for themes and layouts began to develop in the minds of the editors

With the beginning of school came the decision to make the Rev an all-year book. This meant that instead of covering just part of the year, spring activities would also be included. "It was disappointing to some of the kids that the books weren't delivered in the spring. But in the long run the book will be of more value because it contains the year's entirety. A yearbook should be a yearbook, not just part of one," explained Ann Hochstetler

Soon after the completion of Rev sales in October, assignments were given out and staff members first began to feel the pains of putting together a yearbook. Time was spent working on layouts after school as well as during journalism class. Due to the addition of spring activities the staff was asked to take journalism the entire year instead of just first semester

Whenever tempted to accept defeat dreams of the finished product kept the staff going. "It's neat to think that plain old people like us are editing an actual book. We're really doing big business!" Patty Roth affirmed

In June, 1975, the final deadline was met and the books were delivered in August

PTO and board lend support

Acting as a go-between for teachers and parents, Parent-Teacher Organization met four times throughout the year. Several of these meetings consisted of a basket supper to better acquaint parents and faculty, a talk on discipline by June Yoder, and a discussion on questionnaires each parent received during education thrust weekend. PTO also sponsored an apple fritter stand at the Kalona Fall Festival in October to raise money for a film strip projector for the school.

The school board, which met once a month, found one of its main concerns was lack of parental interest in IMS. At the beginning of the school year, each faculty member was assigned a group of students. These groups were set up so that each student would be assured of having a faculty member to whom they could go with questions, suggestions, or even complaints. The faculty also visited in their students' homes. The board hoped these arrangements would make each family more aware of what went on at the school.

A development committee was also set up by the board. This committee met with a student development committee and together they determined what was necessary to improve the school. Their ideas were then worked into the remodeling and renovation plan.

As of May 1, 1975, Myron Graber was appointed Director of Development. His main responsibility was to organize and coordinate all fundraising programs initiated by the Board of Education.

"Football? We don't have a football team, but we have soccer."

Twenty-three guys made up the soccer team with Norm Yoder as coach. Norm commented, "I thought they really hustled, and that was the key for a successful team."

A trip to Lancaster, Pennsylvania was a highlight for the team at the end of the season. Catching chickens and giving buggy rides at the Kalona Fall Festival helped to raise money for the trip.

IMS impressed many with a 13-2-1 record for the season.

One member of the team remarked, "It was really fun. More guys could get involved in soccer than if we had football. I plan on going out again next year."

Cross country began the season with three new runners. Despite the team's handicap of pulled muscles and sprained ankles, the team did quite well winning four out of five dual meets and placing first out of seven teams at the Lake Iowa competition. Coach Wilbur Yoder felt cross country to be the most physically demanding sport requiring both effort and mental determination.

"Stand up and cheer, let 'em know we're here!" There was no mistake. They were there. Every game, win or lose, the crowds and fans were there to cheer on the IMS team. Students and community suddenly became unified as the IMS team ran out on the court. With the aid of the cheerleaders and Floyd Park's unmistakable bugle, one could not help but get involved.

Sore throats and hoarse voices were often the after-effects of an exciting game. One student stated, "I think that the IMS crowd is really unique. There is very little booing coming from the fans. It's a real positive kind of support."

Lot's of hard work and sweat were the results of cheerleading practices which included learning new cheers, making posters, and planning pep rallies. For the new cheerleaders it was discovering that being on the squad wasn't all it was cracked up to be. It sometimes meant sacrificing three nights a week. Through all this, however, a new understanding of each other was reached.

The Booster Club was an important asset to the team. Dave May put it thus, "They support the whole team. Without their money, it would be very hard to support the interscholastic program." With the end of the first semester came the arrival of the new bleachers. A fund started by the Alumni Booster Club provided these bleachers to accomodate the fans.

May's magic prevails

What was IMS's secret for a winning basketball team with a perfect season record of 13-0? "I've always felt that whichever team works the hardest is going to win," Coach Dave May explained.

IMS entered into its third year of interscholastic basketball with a change from the usual schedule. Pella Christian, Columbus Junction, Lisbon, Clear Creek, and Keota were added to the list while Deep River-Millersburg was dropped.

Gaining recognition with a half page write-up in the Cedar Rapids Gazette, the team's success was summed up as being a combination of "May's Magic" and his players.

Entering sectionals with much enthusiasm, IMS beat Deep River-Millersburg by a score of 83-50. Highland triumphed in sectionals however, when they beat IMS 83-75.

TOP: Dave May scores again for the faculty team

The guys enjoy watching and laughing at the girls' basketball techniques.

Strike one! If at first she doesn't succeed, Cathy Mullet tries again.

Sometimes enthusiastically and other times not so enthusiastically, girls participated in intramural sports. Speedball, field hockey, softball, volleyball, and basketball were sports in which girls could work off some steam. With the exception of softball, classes competed as they battled to the end of their games.

Sophomore Paulette Miller commented, "I like girls' intramurals because usually I'm just with the kids in my own class. With intramural sports, I get to know other kids from other classes when I play with them."

The saying, "there's a place for everyone" was true as boys less interested in interscholastic sports took part in intramurals. Flag football, soccer, softball, volleyball, and basketball helped to keep the guys huffing and puffing during activity period. "It's not whether you win or lose that counts, but how you play the game", was the attitude that triumphed in some while "we should have won that game; we were the better team" took over in the spirits of others.

Track gains interest

Track for both boys and girls became one of the main spring athletic activities again this year. While neither team rated high with team standings, both coaches felt this was due to the lack of depth in the team.

Girls track showed a favorable increase in interest as this year's team consisted of eighteen members compared to last year's six participants. Coach Dave May was pleased with the improvement the girls showed in breaking several school records.

The twenty boys on the boy's track team were coached by Norm Yoder. While there were several strong sprinters and hurdlers, Norm felt that the team could have used more distance runners.

Coach May and Coach Yoder were pleased with the number of freshmen and sophomores who took an interest in track this year. They anticipate a successful future.

 to be sure, but the atmosphere here has been one of caring and concern for everyone knows everyone else's problems of caring and concern for each other and items that arise among the students and at basketball games but the school is through it all with a lot of love and We appreciate the school's efforts to make the students feel like they are part of the team. It's not just about the games, it's about the students and the staff who make it all work.
 I think it's a great school and
 I'm proud to be a part of it."

IMS changes us

The tradition at IMS continues to change. No longer do parents and friends come out to the Friday night intramural games. Instead, the community rallies behind the team in other ways. Mid-Prairie buses bring students from that district to school, doing away with the IMS buses.

Some things remain the same: the good reputation of choir, our annual music festival, and practice of activity period and chapel. But we have changed because of our experiences here.

LARGE PHOTO: Mid Prairie buses have become a familiar sight at IMS this year, due to the state busing law.

And because we are IMS, it has changed too. No longer are we an isolated school in the sticks, but rather a school adapting to new ideas around us. The new people we have met plus new programs initiated each year all bring a new influence to our student body and school. We the school must change in our views toward this outside scope while retaining the values that made our forefathers build IMS in the beginning.
